

The January snowstorm created plenty of snow that required shoveling, and Capitol Hill Village answered the challenge. New volunteer Jack Montgomery and his son were among the 9 volunteers who helped clear sidewalks for 15 CHV member-households.

Stay Warm Under the Stars at the CHV Gala

While it has been unusually cold outside, plans are heating up for the annual Capitol Hill Village Gala March 15 at St. Mark's Church.

The Gala, along with the on-line auction and Salon Events, are important fundraising events that also provide members, volunteers and neighbors the chance to come together for fun and fellowship. For over 15 years, Capitol Hill Village has been a critical lifeline for older adults in our community, helping us stay healthy, engaged, independent, and thriving in an age-friendly environment. Together we can ensure this vital work continues.

★ Salute the Stars—members, volunteers, the community, and yourself who help older adults thrive in a vibrant, inclusive, and age-friendly community.

The on-line auction will be available for preview on Feb. 15, and open for bidding on March 1. Here's what you will find:

- ★ Gift certificates for popular, and sometimes hard to get into, restaurants on Capitol Hill
- ★ Tickets for live theater—both the bigger venues and the little guys
- ★ Opportunities for “experiences” and services
- ★ Vacation homes from the mid-Atlantic to Puerto Rico and west to California.

Gala tickets are available now (click here to purchase), and Gala attendees will have first chance to purchase seats at the always-popular Salon Events, featuring prominent and interesting guest speakers.

Lots more details including the list of vacation homes that are offered, the lineup of Salon speakers, ticket buying details, and information on happenings at the Gala are inside. See pages 6–7.

Celebrate Black History at the Frederick Douglass House

Frederick Douglass is widely considered the father of the civil rights movement in the United States, and his home at Cedar Hill in Anacostia provides a glimpse into his remarkable public life.

Join the CHV staff and other CHV members on Tuesday, February 25, for a 2:00 p.m. guided tour of the home's first and second floors.

Frederick Douglass became the best known leader of the movement for African American civil rights in the 19th century. After escaping from slavery in Maryland, Douglass became a national leader of the abolitionist movement in Massachusetts and New York, during which he gained fame for his oratory and incisive antislavery writings.

He wrote three autobiographies; in the first, Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, an American Slave, published in 1845, he described his experiences as an enslaved person. It became a bestseller and was influential in promoting the cause of abolition. He also actively supported women's suffrage and held several public offices.

The National Park Service Visitor Center and the Douglass home contain museum objects, documents, and photographs showcasing Frederick Douglass's life at Cedar Hill. He lived there from 1878 until his death in 1895, and the home provided the backdrop to his active political and warm family life.

The spacious estate and well-furnished rooms are a testament to Douglass's lifelong struggle to overcome entrenched prejudice. His personal belongings, home furnishings, books, and photographs of family and friends can be seen in the place where Douglass and his family used them. They provide a unique insight into his personal and public life, family, home, and interests.

How to get tickets for February 25 tour with Capitol Hill Village

The only entry to the Douglass house is through a guided tour. Eleven tickets are available by registering here or calling the CHV office at 202-543-1778.

Let the CHV office know by Thursday, February 20 if you would like to attend the tour and if you need a ride.

Accessibility: Please note that there are ramps leading up to the home; the other option is walking 85 steps to the entrance.

FROM THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Literature Tells a Black History Story

Judy Berman

Happy Black History Month!

As a student of literature and history, I'm well aware that the teller decides what gets included in the story and what gets left out.

For those of us who attended predominantly white schools in the early- and mid-20th Century, we heard very few voices who truly valued the culture and cultural contributions of African Americans. For example, I grew up less than 15 miles from New York City's 125th St., the center of Harlem. And yet, it wasn't until college, in an African American literature course, that I became aware of the incredible cultural explosion of the Harlem Renaissance, when writers like Zora Neale Hurston, Langston Hughes, Nella Larsen, and Jean Toomer were at the height of their powers.

From the first published African American poet, Phyllis Wheatley,

Phyllis Wheatley

to contemporary stars like Claudia Rankine (a recent McArthur Genius award winner and author of Citizen: An American Lyric, one of The New York Times' 100 best books of the 21st Century), the work of African American writers has developed alongside and often in conversation with the white canon, telling stories of African American life and experience that celebrate and interrogate American life. For Black History Month, I'd like to share some of my favorite experiences with African American writers and literature, which, coincidentally, share a connection to Washington, DC.

Toni Morrison

I have to start with Toni Morrison, winner of the 1993 Nobel Prize in Literature. Although she was born and raised in Ohio, Morrison graduated from and taught at Howard University.

There, Morrison found her voice and her audience—she would write to and for her "neighborhood" with phrases and themes that would resonate with their lived truth.

Morrison's The Bluest Eye changed me. It helped me see how the mainstream definition of beauty in America was based on a white ideal and how demoralizing and downright dangerous that could be to the lives of those who were different. Beloved, her most famous novel, challenged me to understand how slavery could drive a mother to infanticide. Hearing Toni Morrison read aloud from the "Middle Passage" section of Beloved was a once-in-a-lifetime experience. She had a regal presence and spoke almost in song, the rhythmic rocking of the ship propelling the story forward. It was as beautiful as it was horrific to take in.

Incidents in the Life of a Slave Girl by Harriet Jacobs was one of the first books I read in the Slave Narrative tradition. Jacobs, too, spent a significant amount of time in Washington supporting those who had recently escaped from slavery. Her narrative helped me to see how social norms and standards can be used to discredit those whose lives don't conform, even when the circumstances in which they're forced to live don't allow for conformity. Published under a pseudonym, Jacobs explains the internal contradictions of being a female slave, expected by white standards of femininity to be "chaste" yet subject under slavery to routine sexualization. She worries that white women in the North whose support she desperately needs will reject her appeal because she does not live up to their standards of chastity. Jacobs chooses to express her resistance to bondage by having a relationship with a white man who is not her owner. She explains, "in looking back, calmly, on the events of my life, I feel that the slave woman ought not to be judged by the same standard as others." The same could be said for the mother in Beloved, written more than 100 years later.

Langston Hughes is another favorite writer. It's his experience as a busboy at the Wardman Park Hotel that lies behind the name of the local restaurant chain Busboys and Poets. In Montage of a Dream Deferred, Langston Hughes integrates the music of the Harlem Renaissance with the early rumblings of the 20th Century civil rights movement:

Good morning, daddy!
Ain't you heard
The boogie-woogie rumble
Of a dream deferred?

Listen closely:
You'll hear their feet
Beating out and beating out a—

You think It's a happy beat?

I love Hughes' poetry, in part because of its directness and accessibility. Like Nikki Giovanni, another favorite, Hughes writes like he's having a conversation with his audience, one that he cares more about reaching than impressing. At the same time, his poems reward a closer look: Who is "daddy"? and why does the speaker seem surprised that he and "daddy" are not hearing the same thing in the beat?

Finally, if you're interested in local history, one of the best books I've read is Chocolate City: A History of Race and Democracy in the Nation's Capital. Authors Chris Asch and George Derek Musgrove (a racially-mixed author team whom I met when the book first came out) call race "the central fault line of DC political, economic, and social life." Their nearly 500-page narrative is persuasive. This detailed history covers our familiar geography in a completely unfamiliar way (some of you who lived through the periods they describe may have a different view). I thoroughly enjoy learning about the activism of Black DC residents and the institutions they created to advance principles of American democracy. As we face another potential crisis of democracy and democratic values, there are some important lessons to be learned here about creativity, resistance, and persistence.

Thank you for indulging my brief literary review. I tell people I'm a recovering academic, and columns like this suggest I have more recovering to do. But literature of all kinds has always brought me joy, and I hope I've shared some of that here. Who are your favorite African American writers? I'd love to chat!

Reflections on Greatness and Character

By Susan Sarfati

Last month, the Electoral College certified the election of the 47th President of the United States and he was inaugurated.

Our nation expressed gratitude to outgoing President Biden and Vice President Harris, while also honoring President Jimmy Carter during his memorial services.

These historic events have prompted me to reflect on what defines greatness and character in our leaders and in everyday people. That's no simple task, and I do not aim to list traits or qualities. Instead, I prefer to share real-life examples I have witnessed, which illustrate these virtues.

Over 13 seasons, I had the privilege of producing the Nation's Capital Distinguished Speakers series in the Kennedy Center's Concert Hall, hosting four events annually. During this time, more than 100 speakers—presidents, prime ministers, Nobel laureates, scientists, entertainers, and others—graced the stage.

Despite their accolades, many of these individuals described themselves as ordinary people who achieved extraordinary things through hard work and perseverance. In my view, their greatness often emerged from acts of character, courage, kindness, and compassion.

Here are a few inspiring examples from the Series:

- A young boy with a terminal illness idolized President Jimmy Carter and longed to meet him. When President Carter agreed to speak at our series, he graciously dined with the boy, giving him his undivided attention. Later in the evening, the boy had the honor of introducing President Carter on stage. The joy and gratitude between them created a moment of profound happiness and a lasting relationship. President Carter delivered the eulogy at his funeral.

- The first deaf student from Jordan to attend Gallaudet University had a unique opportunity to meet Her Majesty Queen Noor at the Kennedy Center. The Queen then personally contacted the student's parents in Jordan and invited the entire family to visit her at the royal palace.
- After delivering a speech at the Kennedy Center, President George H.W. Bush approached the Kennedy Center staff and humbly asked for their feedback on his performance. Imagine how they felt being asked for their opinions by a former President of the United States!
- Famed physicist Stephen Hawking, before giving a talk about black holes, met with physically challenged high school and college students. Rather than discussing advanced scientific concepts, he shared words of encouragement about how he overcame obstacles and achieved accomplishments despite limitations.

Acts of greatness and character are not reserved for luminaries; they exist in the everyday kindness and generosity of ordinary people. I have observed this firsthand within the Capitol Hill Village community:

- Members consistently show concern and compassion for one another, stepping up when someone needs help.
- Many donate financially to CHV, enabling others to participate in community activities.
- During the holidays, members bake homemade cookies and distribute them as gestures of caring and goodwill.
- When someone is unwell or in need, fellow members often ask, "What can I do for you?" and follow through with tangible acts of support.

CHV is uniquely positioned to foster a sense of community and connection, offering support in an unpredictable world. Each act of kindness builds a stronger network of care and demonstrates the finest qualities of greatness and character—one person at a time.

A Big Thank You!

We will have an extra reason to be happy at the February 19 Capitol Hill Village Happy Hour because will be saluting CHV volunteers! What's Happening at the Gala

- Dancing to tunes spun by DJ Captain Dave (the return of last year's favorite)
- Line dancing—partners not required; Roberta Rothstein and her dancers make a repeat appearance to help everyone get involved!
- Good food and plenty of opportunity for conversation
- First chance to sign up for Salon Events
- Salute to the Stars—members, volunteers, the community, and YOURSELF—who help older adults thrive in a vibrant, inclusive, and age-friendly community.

Salon Events

The Gala is the first chance to buy seats for the always-popular Salon events, which will be scheduled throughout the Spring in CHV members' homes. Once again, the lineup includes prominent and interesting guest speakers with the opportunity for discussion and food in intimate settings. Some of the Salons will sell out, so attending the Gala gives you the best chance to snag a seat.

This is the current line-up, and more may be added. Information about each will be in the on-line auction site prior to sales opening at the Gala:

- Author Louis Bayard; his new book is The Wildes
- Mike Bowers and Michael Werner; the Eastern Market cheese guy and DCanter wine owner
- Ryan Brown, founder of Opera Lafayette
- Rebecca Fasman, collections and history curator at the Kinsey Institute

There's something for everyone at the CHV Gala, Online Auction, and Salon Events!

Thinking about going to the CHV Gala but wondering if you will have a good time if you come solo? Rest assured; this is not a couples-focused event. Many people arrive solo, and the variety of activities has something for everyone. Some people will be dancing, others will be listening to the music and eating good food, others will find a quiet area to chat, some will be discussing and bidding on Salon Events. You're pretty much guaranteed to have someone to talk to, and you might make some new friends!

How about coming to the Gala with your own group! Check in with friends and neighbors, explain how important Capitol Hill Village is to the community, and organize a group for a night of fun at the Gala—could be as small as two. Or contact the CHV Office for help locating others to attend with. The more, the merrier.

Catherine Bego: A Career of Fighting Substance Abuse

By Jane Lang

Seventy-nine years ago, Catherine Boddie's parents took a hard look around them in Franklin, Georgia, and concluded there was no future for a young black family there. So, her father, Calvin, set out for Washington DC in 1945, and soon his wife Pearl and their children, including three-year-old Catherine, joined him. The family of nine settled into a row house in near Northeast Capitol Hill—the same home where Catherine lives today.

Over the decades, Rev. Catherine Bego (known as “Grannie” to her friends) has seen a lot of change in her own life as well as her community. She graduated from Howard University with both bachelor's and master's degrees and taught in neighborhood elementary schools and recently became a member of Capitol Hill Village.

She married Emanuel Bego and they raised three children in the same home where she grew up. She left teaching for a life of community organizing and service, first in response to the urban renewal program to advocate for the rights of displaced residents. In that connection, she was nominated by Rev. Walter Fauntroy to serve as a Community Fellow.

She discovered her true calling when Dr. Robert Dupont recruited her in 1969 to manage a methadone treatment center on Ninth St. NE. She was recognized with numerous promotions in the Addiction Prevention and Recovery Administration (later the Narcotics Treatment Administration), and spearheaded various programs to combat the growing scourge of drug abuse in DC. She takes pride in the fact that many of her clinic patients recovered and became successful professionals.

“Substance abuse is a disease,” she emphasizes, and superficial programs and recreational activities are inadequate to meet its devastating challenge. She resolved to bring her faith to the task, initiating “Soul Explosions” to rally the community to discover in faith what she considers the most powerful antidote to drug addiction. Even as she introduced methadone to patients at her clinic, she enjoined them to “look to a power greater than yourself.”

Rev. Bego was grounded in her Christian faith by her parents, but her trifecta of “compassion, competence, and commitment,” while inspired by Christianity, is not confined to any religion or race. She has worked with Jewish, Muslim, and Christian, black, white, and Asian neighbors to address drug abuse in the community. In Rev. Bego's world, compassion springs from love, and the “multitudes” that inspire her compassion include, among others, homeless neighbors and substance abusers.

“Competence,” she emphasizes, means “not college degrees, but understanding.” To address a problem, one must begin with recognizing and understanding it. Finally, there is commitment, which is tantamount to a calling. “Don't start working on a problem if you're not willing to stay with it—you can't jump in and jump out,” if you want to foster change, she cautions.

Over decades on Capitol Hill, Rev. Bego witnessed many changes in the fabric of the community. When she came to the neighborhood as a child, most of the families on her block were white. Her family “was kindly received,” she recalls.

By the 1960s, the racial composition of the area was changed. Most of the white families had decamped for the suburbs, as part of a demographic dynamic that changed the profile of Washington. Her street became predominantly black and also more closely knit. Children and grownups alike were in and out of each other's homes on a regular basis. “Socializing” was a big part of life on the block. She remembers those years warmly, despite the toll that drugs began to take on the area and the spate of violence that claimed some innocent lives.

Then, a new cycle began in the early 2000s, with white families moving back and black families relocating to the suburbs. Today, her street is mixed racially and has a “neighborly” feel. Though she misses the extent of the socializing that she enjoyed 30 or 40 years ago, she's grateful to the neighbor who brings her bread, another who fixes her car. She reciprocates graciously with “edible” gift baskets. Social relationships change, she says somewhat wistfully, “but love is still here.”

Just When You Thought You Had Heard Everything...

The Continuing Saga of Scams

Whether you've driven through a highway toll booth recently or not, you might have received a text saying you owe money for unpaid tolls. It's probably a scam. Across the country, scammers are pretending to be tolling agencies and sending texts demanding money.

With vigilance, you can avoid getting burned.

It starts with a text out of the blue that says you have unpaid tolls and need to pay immediately. The text might show a dollar amount for how much you supposedly owe and include a link that takes you to a page to enter your bank or credit card information—but it's a phishing scam. Not only is the scammer trying to steal your money, but if you click on the link, they could get your personal information (such as driver's license number)—and even steal your identity.

To avoid a text scam like this:

Don't click on any links in, or respond to, unexpected texts.

Scammers want you to react quickly, but it's best to stop and check it out.

Check to see if the text is legitimate. Reach out to the state's tolling agency using a phone number or website you know is real—not the information in the text.

Report and delete unwanted text messages. Use your phone's "report junk" option to report unwanted texts to your messaging app or forward them to 7726 (SPAM). Once you've checked it out and reported it, delete the text.

Learn more about spotting and avoiding text scams from the Federal Trade Commission at ftc.gov/textscams.

And, then there's this...

From Executive Director Judy Berman:

I came home the other night to a stack of mail all concerning accounts that I had supposedly applied for, but which were denied. Included was an attempt to access a credit reporting agency that is not among the "big three"—Experian, TransUnion, and Equifax.

What saved me was that my accounts at the three Credit Reporting Agencies are locked. Only I can open them, and I do that only when I'm making an application of some kind. Locking or freezing your account is FREE. It's a hassle because you need to act separately on each one, and you have to keep good track of the passwords—but it is well worth it if my experience is any indicator.

Even though the fraudsters were unsuccessful, I reported the fraud to the FTC, and I put a fraud alert on the three accounts so I have protection should there be any financial losses going forward. <https://reportfraud.ftc.gov>.

Important Tips

First, don't be embarrassed if you find yourself caught in a scam—thousands have already been there!

- When you get a suspicious phone text or email, DON'T CLICK ON ANYTHING IN THE MESSAGE.
- Even if it seems legitimate, only used trusted sites and phone numbers to follow up (you will need to contact these separately).
- Contact friends or the CHV Office at 202-543-1778 for support and assistance.

Strengthen Ankle Muscles to Reduce Falls

In the research about sidewalk safety, we learned that some people fall on sidewalks because of a reduced walking gait. Their step is short, and their toes do not rise much above the sidewalk surface, making it easy to catch the toe on an uneven sidewalk.

This is an easy exercise to strengthen muscles in the ankle that may help increase the height a person's toe rises above the sidewalk and help avoid falls.

- Lie in bed beneath the covers, for example before sleep or upon awakening.
- Point your toes horizontally (see Figure 1),
- Pull the bedding taught, and bring your foot to a perpendicular position (see Figure 2).

- Repeat until the muscles in your feet and ankles get tired.

Over a matter of weeks, you may be able to triple the number of repetitions or more; for example, 20 repetitions in the first day before muscles become tired; 60 repetitions after a few weeks of exercise. As always, consult a doctor before you begin exercising.

If you are injured in a fall on a DC public sidewalk, you may be eligible to have some of your expenses paid through the DC Office of Risk

Management using this form: <https://orm.dc.gov/service/tort-liability-claims>

As always, if you observe a sidewalk hazard, take a picture of the hazard on your cell phone, and send it with the address of the house closest to the hazard to: chvpedestriansafety@gmail.com.

CHV will submit a 311 request to the DC government on your behalf requesting maintenance.

Hazardous Waste Pick-up

Note: Registration closes Wednesday, Jan. 29

Hazardous materials and personal papers will be picked up from CHV members' homes for delivery to DC's safe disposal site. Here's what you need to do:

- Personal papers (medical, financial, utility bill stubs, old check stubs, etc.). Put in paper sacks or cardboard boxes. These will be shredded at the drop-off site.
- Chemicals and batteries (household cleaners, garden chemicals, alkaline batteries). Put these in a sturdy plastic bag or a cardboard box, and make sure the containers are sealed and not leaking.
- E-waste (televisions, TV remotes, computers, monitors, modems, DVD players, cellphones, NiCad batteries, etc.) and other items not accepted in weekly home trash pickup. Remove your hard drive from computers you are disposing. Wipe your address book and personal information from cellphones.

NO SMALL APPLIANCES. Hand mixers, blenders, etc. can go in the regular trash.

NO LARGE APPLIANCES (washers, dryers, refrigerator, etc.) Call DC 311 for bulk trash pick-up.

NO DRUGS Over-the-counter medicines = regular trash. Prescription drugs = call or drop off at the Village for proper disposal.

If you need assistance, call the CHV office at 202-543-1778 or e-mail info@capitolhillvillage.org. When you register, please indicate what and how much you have to be picked up.

Memory Studio

Memory Studio is an art and music workshop for individuals with memory loss, with respite services for care partners. It will be offered most Saturdays through July.

Join Capitol Hill Village and Teaching Artist Nephelie Andonyadis for a program of music and art. This series will include live music, movement, and art activities inspired by work from the Phillips Collection. Lunch will be served. Enjoy a creative environment without judgement, where the goal is to be present, have fun, and to focus on what folks can do rather than what they can't.

No formal dementia diagnosis is required. Anyone who is experiencing memory loss or cognitive challenges, especially if those challenges are changing the way they engage with others and causing concern for care partners, are welcome to participate. Care partners are welcome but not required to stay or participate. Programming for care partners will include a rotating set of supports including an optional support group and opportunities for nurture, like massage. Care partners are free to use the time in whatever way fills their cup on any given day.

There is no online registration for this program. Those interested must contact CHV for an assessment of eligibility and an intake interview: call 202-543-1778 or email info@capitolhillvillage.org and ask for Judy.

Open to all.

Tuesday, February 4, 4:00–5:00 p.m.

Virtual Event: Artificial Intelligence (AI) Group

New Affinity Group

The February meeting will focus on some free AI tools. In January, we learned how ChatGPT-o3-preview, a free tool, could do something that two others, Claude-3.5-Sonnet and Poe-Assistant, could not. Participants wanted more discussion about the strengths and weaknesses of these free tools.

CHV cooperated with other DC Villages to form this affinity group, which aims to create a space for older adults to engage with emerging technologies—discussing how AI might influence healthcare, accessibility, and daily life for seniors. We hope to help Village members better understand and navigate the potential benefits and challenges AI presents to our community.

Open to all. Register at <https://capitolhill.helpfulvillage.com/events/12567>

Virtual Event: Village Connections Training— Helping Members Downsize

New Year, New Space—supporting members downsize and declutter.

This training is designed to equip CHV volunteers with skills and tools to support members who are looking to downsize or declutter their homes. If you need a boost in motivation to achieve your New Year's resolutions, this session will provide practical tips and insights for assisting friends navigate this process. Whether you're offering support to others or considering starting your own decluttering journey, join us for an informative session on ways to declutter.

Register for this event on helpful village <https://capitolhill.helpfulvillage.com/events/12758> or by contacting Jenna Jones at jjones@capitolhillvillage.org.

Volunteers only.

Virtual Event: Taking Care of Yourself— a Group for Men

This is a discussion group for men to talk about self-care, especially, but not exclusively, as it relates to caring for others, such as a loved one with an illness or disability.

According to AARP, 40 percent of the family caregivers in this country are men, and men often have a different experience with caregiving than women and may have a different relationship to the idea of self-care. This is a space for men to share their experiences and find support from other men.

This event is hosted by Geoff Lewis and facilitated by Tim Rogers, who is certified in Somatic Integrity and has years of experience in group work including as a volunteer for Dupont Circle Village.

Open to all.

Monday, February 10, 7:00–8:00 p.m.
